EDITORIAL COMMENT

By NORMAN H. PARKS, Publisher Register

DECISION HAS QUIETING EFFECT

With a unanimous decision of the United States supreme court upholding the constitutionality of the Volstead act, we may expect to hear less noise from the wet minority than has emanated from that organization during the past few months. Of course the booze crowd will keep on yelping, doing their little damndest to get the corner saloon back into the picture of American life. But their chance of success is just about nil.

Congress, evidently encouraged by the supreme court decision, has appropriated an increased amount of money for enforcement. A tightening up on the illicit liquor traffic is noticeable all over America. Here in Alameda county our sheriff, Driver, and district attorney, Warren, are becoming terrors to bootleggers. The aridity even in south Alameda county is becoming irksome to those favoring the old order of things under the convict, Becker.

A sober America has brought happiness to millions of women and children that under pre-Volstead days knew little but misery. The pay check went to the rum dealer. Want was the portion of the unhappy wife and the children she bore the man who loved his liquor more than his family or his God. Today these same children, most of them grown now, know their father as a sober, reliable workman or business man. The family has its car. The evening is spent at the theater or a good restaurant, together. Under the old order of things the father spent the evening in the saloonthe children and wife at home, listening for the uncertain footstep of husband and father, hoping, yet fearing his return.

Those who want this type of "personal liberty" to come back, will find this writer ever in constant warfare and opposition. We have a certain pity for, and are constantly mystified by their political and economic reasoning. We wonder if they actually ever do reason the matter out along the lines of greatest good for the greatest number. The leaders of the wet movement, of course, hope to financially gain by bringing back the old days. Others just naturally would give up everything in the world worth while for their drink. Such people should be protected against themselves. They are weak-minded, devoid of will-power, rarely ever a success, and live a handto-mouth existence until the end. Prohibition is their greatest friend. And they despitefully use it.

At any rate, whether we like it or not, the Volstead act is still effective—the law—and will remain so long after this writer has passed on to his

a new experience!

ONE of the chief reasons for the flashing acceleration and smooth speed and power of Nash Eight-80 and Eight-90 models is aircraft-type Twin-Ignition. In each cylinder, two spark plugs placed opposite each other, fire at precisely the same instant. The highly compressed gas ignites at two points. It is burned more quickly, efficiently. The result:-A more powerful explosion—instant responsiveness—notable gasoline economy.—The moment you step on the accelerator, you will realize the important difference Twin-Ignition makes. left him more than 31,000,000. His is skeptical. Later he gets a telegram from McPeake confirming the legacy. That night he confesses his love to Neille, and she in turn admits she loves him, but refuses to bind him in any way for the present.

CHAPTER IV .- News of Elmer's

CHAPTER V.—Through McPeake, Nellio finds that Hiram Butter-worth's will instructs the payment of a mortgage of $40,000, with compound interest, to the heirs of one Benedict Catheron, who was Nellie's grandfather. She figures that about $1,000,000 will be due her from the estate, leaving very little for Elmer, who does not know that she is Catheron's heir.

CHAPTER VI.—Elmer is boosted tor membership on the board of trustees of the village high school, and agrees to make the race, Nel-die has visions of making a great nan of Elmer.

CHAPTER VII.—Colorado Charley's confederate comes to Pliarcitos to see Elmer, posing as a newspaper reporter named Doris Gatewood. Elmer finds her attractive, and invites her to stay for dinner. After dinner and a visit to the theater "Doris" goes back to Los Angeles, having secured from Elmer a promise to visit her and her "Dorther" at their home in that city. She reports to Colorado Charley that the "fish is on the line."

CHAPTER VIIL—Unknown to Elemer, Neilte has seen Doris in Pilarcitos and recognized her as the "adventuress" type. Elmer goes to Los Angeles to purchase a car. as a bet is a bet."

"But 1—well, Mr. Clarke, I was going to suggest to you that we might get together with the present holder of that mortgage and effect a settlement. The deficiency judgment is outlawed, and if we made a poor mouth and told her that a large portion of the estate consisted of real estate not readily salable, we might get her to abate the compounded interest. Or we might induce her to accept a lot of dead real estate at inflated values—fix it with the appraisers of the estate to reappraise the property."

Elmer raised his hand protesting-Elmer raised is and protestingly. "You're proposing something dirty, mister," he said evenly. "Get this, my friend: All the dirt rights of the Butterworth tribe stood in the name of my late uncle, and I'm not going to join with him or any-body to take advantage of a wombody to take advantage of a wombody to take advantage of a wombody to take advantage. "I suppose it's a lawyer's duty to protect his client's interests, and I suppose, too, it is natural that folks should disagree as to what constitutes sporty treatment," Elmer replied, grudgingly, "so I'll forget your suggestion. Just don't make another one like it."

mer replied, grudgingly, "so It forget your suggestion. Just don't make another one like it."

"Fair enough. I'll make one the very reverse of it. Mr. Clarke, for more than a quarter of a century your uncle had a very confidential employee—a sort of chief clerk, manager and man Friday—one Bunker. Bunker is one of those mousy little men who are whipped in the battle of life the day they come into it. A retiring, timid, faithful, obedient, hard-working, brainy, efficient rabbit of a man. His job with your uncle was the first job he ever had—and he is still on the estate pay roll, helping me close up odds and ends of business matters.

Very early in life he made a missake. He married—and had children—gave hostages to fortune, as it were. So his job was bread and butter and he never had the courage to quit and seek another. I think it must have occurred to your uncle, from time to time, that the impossible might happen, and he would lose Bunker's services, so he promised Eunker he would leave him one hundred thousand dollars in his will. This promise he reterated from time to time, but when it came to making his will he betrayed Bunker. Cut him off with ten thousand dollars—and if I had not fought him all over the effice he would have let Bunker down with five thousand. Poor Bunker is heart broken, of course." Peake paused and looked at Elmer meaningly.

"Exactly."

"We'll cross that bridge when we tome to it, and first we will assertain whether or not we have a bridge to cross. I am a young man, but I have made this discovery. The Bunkers of this world receive from the world exactly what they merit. Nobody but a fool—and a particularly dumb sort of fool—could work for my Uncle Hiram for more than a quarter of a century and not know that he was inhuman, that he would lie and take brutal advantage of people. I dare say Bunker was so weak he would do the dirty little deeds his master ordered him to do. Is that not so?"

"Well, I'm afraid that, in a cer-tain sense, you are right, Mr. Clarke."

"Thanks. Not interested. There's a girl back in Pilarcitos, Calif., who claims all of my sentimental attention. I hope to tell you I wouldn't lose her for a sum equal to the national debt."

"Bully for you, Mr. Clarke! And by the way, I must say I have never seen a man take such a loss with a smile before. I'll say you're game."

"Can't lose what I never had, Mr. McPeake. By the way, was the record of this old mortgage among

"Are the properties selable?"

"At a price—yes."

"Well, if we bong on until they are salable at a fair price we may be years closing this estate, and in the monawhile that mortgage will continue to draw eight per cent compounded semi-annually. That's no business, Mr. McPeake. Get an order of court to sell that property at public auction."

and the probate court has approved the sale."

"When the estate is finally settled, what do you think my share will amount to?"

"Oh, I should say, offhand, a quarter of a million dollars."

"Well, I'll always be a millionaire in Pilarcitos. I've been duly advertised as such and while I continue to pay my bills I'll have the credit rating of a millionaire. That will belp. I can go just as far on credit as I can on cash. Just won't go so fast, that's all." He rose to go. "Think I'll go ea to New York and see some good shows," he informed McPeake. "Despite the walloping you've handed me, I think I can afford a month or two of Broadway. After all, a quarter of a million is better than a poke in the eye with a sharp stick. I'll hang around Muscatine a few days and sign any papers you may require."

He took a cheerful departure. The instant the door was closed behind him McPeake rang for his secretary. "I've always heard that out in California they grow things big," he informed her. "Now make out a petition to the probate court for the sale of all the real estate of the Butterworth estate, and I'll have Mr. Clarke and Bunker sign it. Then make out an order of sale for the court to sign, and in about a month from now we'll distribute the estate and now we'll distribute the estate and send Elmer Clarke back to win the best little love lottery you ever heard of. "Well, I'm banking on Elmer." CHAPTER XIV

THE following afternoon, when Elmer again called at Me-Peake's office, he found Buaker there. The lawyer introduced them. Elmer greeted the old clerk pleasantly but without enthusiasm, and McReake caw by his quick appraising giance that he was striving to find in Bunker's personality a reasonable excess to be elevent to the old fellow. to the old fellow.

They chatted together for an hour and then Bunker withdrew.
"Well, what do you think of Bunker, now that you've met and talked to him?"

"He's a furtive little cid rat."
Elmer declared promptly. "He took he could, I think, be very crost.

I ennot afford the philanthropy, and whenever I turn philanthropyst. Bunker isn't the sort I'd select as the object of my solicitude. He tells me the old man paid him fifty dollars a month to start and after ten years he was earning two hundred. Not so had. The federal government doesn't do half so well by its employees. I've slaved ten years and when I quit I wasn't earning two hundred a month. For ten years before he died Uncle Hiram was paying him four hundred dollars a month. As clerks are paid. Bunker has fared far, far better than the majority, and I fail to see where he has any kick coming."

"I had an idea he'd broach the subject to you, Mr. Clarke."

"Probably afraid to do so, Wanted to size me up first and decide whether I was hard or easy. He'lt think it over tonight and call to see me at my hotel tomorrow."

"What makes you think he'll do see me at my hotel tomorrow."

"What makes you think he'll do

"What makes you think he'd do that?"
"Oh, I noted a speculative gleam in his eyes! And it's what I'd do if I were Bunker."
Elmer was right. Shortly after be breakfast next morning Bunker called his room from the hotal lebby and saked permission to come to fer a conference. Elmer madily granted it and a few minutes later Bunker, hat in land and howevering affitting from one feet to the other, was standing before him. Himser permitted him to stand fee two minutes; then he decided that the habit of a lifetime is not readily broken and that Bunker was waiting for permission to sit down.

"Please be sonted," he told the eld clerk. "I see you have something on your mind. You appear to be somewhat embarrassed."
"I am, Mr. Clarke. There is a little matter—perhaps Mr. Peake spoke to you shout it—"
"He did," Elmer interrupted. "You refer to my uncle's broken promise to leave you a hundred thousand dollars for the honest and faithful service you accorded him for more than a quarter of a century. I understand he let you down with a bequest for ten thousand, and that you are grievously disappointed. I would be, too, under the circumstances. I can very well understand your disappointment."

"It's been heart-breaking," Bunker quavered. "After all these years, and my wife building hopes on it, air, the blow well-nigh killed her." Elmer nodded. "Still, Uncle Hiram didn't pay you a niggardly salary, Mr. Bunker. Many men in your position earn much less and do not consider themselves ill-treated."

treated."

"They don't do the work I had to do," Bunker protested with sudden vehemence. "It's worth four hundred dollars a month to lie and bully and scheme and take advantage of people. That's what I had to do to earn my four hundred dollars a month. It was worth four thousand a month to have to spend ten hours a day in his society."

"I suppose you knew, from many years of experience, exactly the sort of man my uncle was?"
"Then why did you believe him when he promised to leave you a hundred thousand dollars in his will?" will?

"I didn't think he'd cheat me. I'd

"I didn't think he'd cheat me. I'd done so much for him, you know; things he couldn't entrust to another human being."
"You mean dirty work—confidential dirty work, don't you?"
"Well, it wasn't pleasant, Mr. Clarke, but I had to do it."
"Were these jobs dishonest?"
"Yes."
"I think I understand your view.

"I think I understand your view-voice, in the excitement and anger, growing shrill. "The dirty dog betrayed me."

"And you expect me to remedy the situation by giving you ninety thousand dollars when I collect my inheritance?"

"You could well afford to sir. I've given my life to help build up that fortune you've inherited."

"But I cannot afford it, Bunker. I may have a quarter of a million dollars left when the estate is probated and all the debts settled. Surely you wouldn't expect me to give you ninety thousand dollars out of that sum."

"I think I've earned it." Bunker charged doggedly.
"Perhaps, perhaps. But it's contrary to my code to pay anybody ninety thousand dollars for doing dirty, dishonest jobs. Mr. Bunker."

"Nothing doing," Elmer declered faity. "You lose all along the line, Mr. Bunker. You played your-bead very foolishly and if you erred it is not up to me te correct your error. I'm not a human Christmas tree. The interview is at an end, Mr. Bunker stood up, trembling pitfelily. It was evident to Elmer that Mr. Bunker. You lose."

Bunker stood up, trembling pitifully. It was evident to Elmer that the man had nerved himself to a degree of courage never before experienced in all his drab life. "You give me that ninety thousand dollars or something heavy is going to drop on you. I'll bust you wide open if you don't settle with me, Mr. Clerke," he declared.

Well, don't be so mysterions "Well, deaft he to mysterious. Tell me what you've got on me. Perhaps the knowledge may alter my decision. Until you tell me, however, I'll stand pat. I never dodge a rock thill it's thrown at me."

Bunker came close and lowered his voice. "For years I kept a double set of books for your uncle—one set for him and one for the collector of internal revenue. I made false entries. Whenever I made a deposit in his bank account I deposited the exact total of the receipts as shown that day on my false cashbook. The excess money was put in a safe deposit box, and whenever there was quite a bit of money on hand I bought bonds for him so they couldn't be traced. Why, the record of schemes we put through would make a book! We defrauded the government out of a couple of hundred thousand dollars since January first, 1915, and I can prove it, because your uncle lars since January first, 1915, and I can prove it, because your uncle hadn't been dead ten minutes befor I had his honest set of books out of that office and the fake set in the safe. Now, what do you think about that, Mr. Smarty!"
"You're an even dirtier little rat than I gave you credit for being. So un sign I give you ninety thousand dollars you will put the experts from the internal revenue de-partment on the trail of the estate, and they'll collect so much taxes illegally withheld-" "They'll fine the estate—you know they will," Bunker screamed.

"They can't do anything to your uncle, but they can fine his estate up to one hundred per cent. They won't have any pity on you."

"They ought to fine the estate. I would if I were the collector of internal revenue. Now look here. Bunker—I ought to go to the collector of internal revenue, turn you over to him and have kim put you in fail."

"You can't, You can't prove anything, and I've got those books hidden where nobody can find them. Better accept my proposition. You'll get out with something, then. If you won't play the game I'll see to it that you get out with exactly what I get—a shing!"

"You forget that you are an accessory before the fact. In the eyes of the law you have committed a felony by aiding and abetting my uncle to defraud the government."

"I know. But when I turn state's tion."

"Bunker, you're loathsome. Get out of my room. Quiek. I don't like to rough-house a little old man like you, but if you're still standing there leering triumphantly at me thirty seconds from now I'll manhandle you. Scat, you polecat!" Following Bunker's unceremonious

Following Bunker's unceremonious departure, Elmer Clarke sat down to do some solld thinking. He had need to, for if Bunker's threat should not prove to be an idle one, he was liable to find himself in a most unenviable position.

"Well one thing is certain" he most unenviable position.

"Well, one thing is certain," he decided. "If the collector of internal revenue, egged on by Bunker, should levy on the total residue of the estate, I'll be back, financially, where I was before Uncle Hiram died, but with this exception—I'll be out of a job. Well, I'll soon find another. My health is A-one again, so what the devil do I care for the slings and arrows of outrageous.

so what the devil do I care for the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune, provided I do not have to wait too long to marry Nellie?

"Why, I almost forgot that I am mayor. I have got a job, after all, and it pays me one hundred dollars a month. Well, I've existed on less. Elmer, old settler, you're not licked at all, but oh, boy, when you get back to Pilarcitos your sense of humor is certainly going to be tested! They're going to tell this joke on you while anybody lives to remember it.

"Yes, indeed, Bimer Clarke, you're right! Pilarcitos ian't going to be a pleasant place for you to you're right! Pilarcitos ian't going to be a pleasant place for you to live in hereafter, but—you're going to live there because Nellie lives there, because you're the mayor and also a high school trustee, and you can't resign from either job just because you're a public joke. That would be hauling down your flag, which is alien to your nature—besides which it ing down your flag, which is alien to your nature—besides which, it would be the very finest way of losing Nellie. Guess I'll sing the national anthem of Siam!"

He decided to await developments. It occurred to him that if Bunker really had such a club to swing he would have swung it most profitably on Uncle Hiram before the latter departed for that mysterious land where income taxes are not. He servially would not swing it until he had collected his own not. He servicinly weath ass swing it until he had collected his own legacy from the estate, for Bunker was too cunning to make such a maladroit move. Perhaps his threat had been a monumental bluff.

"I think this is a matter I should take up with McPeake," he decident of the state of the s take up with McPeake," he decided, and forthwith called upon the lawyer. McPeake listened to the incredible tale with a growing disgust manifesting itself on his features.

"You're a shrewd judge of human nature, Mr. Clarke," he declared when Elmer had finished his recital. "Bunker is a rat. I am clared when Elmer had finished his recital. "Bunker is a rat. I am positive, however, that he is bluff-ing you. If he had had such a weapon to use on your uncle, he would have used it. Consequently, I think that the best thing to do is to ignore him and proceed with the distribution of the estate."

"Well, I'll not accept any money that doesn't belong to me, Mr. Me-that doesn't belong to me, Mr. Me-Peake."

That's all very fine, but wait until you know for a certainty that it doesn't belong to you. A black-mailing charge is not sufficient grounds upon which to base an action of this kin!; you cannot possibly be charged with being an accessory after the fact. I think this whole affair is a mare's nest and I advise you to run along to New York, enjoy yourself and return here in about six weeks. I'm certain that nothing will happen until the decree of final distribution is signed; if it doesn't happen then, it will never happen. I have no apprehensions on the matter, Mr. Clarke. Remember, Bunker is an arrant coward."

"Well, perhaps you're right, but I do not think he is bluffing. I don't think he has the courage to bluff. I confess I'm afraid of him."
"Well, I'm not, and the first day he comes in here I'll have him on the carpet and shake him down. I'll write you the results of my inquisition."

So Elmer went on to New York. Five weeks later McPeake wrote him that the real estate had been sold, that all of the dobts of the cetate had been paid and that we sold, that all of the debts of the estate had been paid and that a final decree of distribution had been signed by the judge of the probate court. McPeasse added that Elmer's share of the estate would amount for appropriately would amount to approximately $218,000.

would amount to approximately $218,000.

Immediately upon receipt of this information Elmer came on to Muscatine and the day after his arrival he was to meet McPeake in the latter's office. "Not a peep out of our friend Bunker," he announced, coming at once to the subject closest to Elmer's heart. "I had him in my office and gave him a bad half hour, but could not get any admission from him. He talked vaguely of things he could do, but seemed disinclined to do them. I think he was bluffing."

"Has he received his legacy, Mr. McPeake?"

"I handed him his check ten minutes ago. Thought I might as You will now doubtless desire to look over my accounts," the law-yer continued, and spread before Elmer the final accounting he had prepared for the probate judge. "Here is the statement of the applied the control of praised valuation of the estate, with praised valuation of the estate, with an inventory, and here are all of the vouchers that go with the final accounting. However, I have a client calling in ten minutes, so I suggest that you take all of these papers back to your hotel and study them at your leisure. You might drop in at the bank on your way and have that check certified."

Elmer gathered up all of the papers and took his departure. The check he had received was on the First National bank, downstairs, so Elmer went into the bank first and approached the paying teller's window. "I wish you'd have this check certified," he said and handed it through the critique.

The paying teller took it and departed. Five minutes later he returned and handed the check back to Elmer uncertified. "Sorry." he said, "but a distraint warrant has been served on the bank by the local collector of internal revenue, and we are debarred from honoring any further checks on this account."

"I thank you." said Elmer politely and walked out. Up to Mc-Peake's office he went. The client the latter had been expecting had not yet arrived and Elmer went at once into the lawyer's private office.

"Holy jumped-up Jehosaphat!" yelled Absolom McPeake. "Ko!"

"But yes!"

"I don't believe it!"
"Go downstairs and ask the paying teller of the First National bank. He'll culighten yet I west down there and he enlightened me."
"The dirty dog!" McPeake raved.

Elmer shrugged. "All I'm hoping is that the collector of internal revenue leaves me enough to pay may "Licked!" he croaked. "Licked to a frazzle!"

"All right, I'm licked," Elmer retorted calmly. "What interests me is to know how I was licked."

"Bunker went to the collector of internal revenue directly after you

They have made up the tax returns for those years as they should have been made up had your uncle made an honest return, and the collector informs me that the estate owes the government two hundred and thirty-one thousand, nine hundred and four dollars and eight cents."

They looked at each other, and presently the slow, amused smile crept around Elmer's mouth. "Mac," he asked. "did you get your fee out of the estate before the crash? of the estate before the erash?"

McPeake shook his head wearily.
"Then the joke's on you," Elmer declared, and stood up. "Tell you what you do," he confinued. "You get hold of that collector, run down his assessming and, when you are convinced he is right and we haven't a leg to stand an, you settle with him on the best hands you can.

"Elmer, I'm terribly sorry," Me-Peake, friendliest of men, was calling him by his first name.

"Don't waste your sympathy. Mac, I'm one bird in this world who hates sympathy. I've never been able to use any. Uncle Hiram's money would have meant a great deal to the happiness of that girl I told you about, and for her sake I wish Bunker had never been born. But why repine? When the collector of internal revenue proves his case, hand him this with my compliments," and Elmer laid on McPeak's desk the check the latter had so recently handed him. He held out his hand. He shook hands and departed.

Back at his hotel, he packed his trunk and suitcase, telephoned downstairs for his bill and then lay down on his bed to wait for train time. At four o'clock he was homeward bound and three days later he dropped off the Del Monte Flyer at Pilarcitos and made his way on foot up to his house.

He left the amazed and disappointed Jasper staring after him, went to the telephone and called up Nellie at the bank.

"Elmer speaking, Nellie. I'm home—back home and broke. I'd like to take you out to dinner to-night—probably for the last time—and tell you all about it. Uncle Hiram's estate has melted like a dish of fee cream on a hot stove. Funniest tale you'll ever listen to, Nellie. Brace yourself fee a laugh."

"Oh, Elmer dear! I'm so sorry!"
Nellie's voice was pregnant with tears.

Nellie's voice was pregnant with tears.
"Don't," he pleaded. "Please de not feel serry for me, Nellie. Time enough for that when I begin feeling sorry for myself. I've assimilated the grandest thrashing any man ever assimilated, and I can still stand and see and think clearly. Yes, I've taken a thrashing, but I'm not down and out for the count. I've got all kinds of fight left in me yet—you walt and see."

"Well," Nellie replied, "it's all terribly awful, of course, but for all that, I'm happy. You have come back to me and nothing else mat-ters."

"I've come back to you, but not not dog enough to ask you to share my poverty with me. Nellie, you must forget that I was ever selfish enough to ask you to marry me."

"We'll talk that matter over be-fore we decide," she retorted. "Pick me up at the house at seven o'clock,"

At seven o'clock Elmer called for Nellie and drove her out to Joe Angelotti's roadhouse for dinner. And there, between the soup and nuts, he told her the tale of his vanishing million. When the story was done Nellie poked the table-cloth with the tines of her fork and was silent for about a minute. Then

"What are you going to do?"

"Anything at all that I can find to do, Nellie."

they left the roadhouse. Five miles down the road they came to the first arc light on the outskirts of Pilareitos. Nellie laid her soft little hand on Elmer's arm.

"Pull up under that arc light," she commanded, and Elmer obeyed. From her hag Nellie drew a sheaf of typewritten papers and handed them to Elmer. "Read!" she commanded.

"What is it, Nellie?"

"What is it, Nellie?"
"It's the final accounting of your Uncle Hiram's estate submitted to the court by the executor, Absolom McPeake. You didn't take time to read it when he submitted a copy to you, so he sent it on to me to show you."
"How do you—why—I didn't

"I'm happy you happened to be Benedict Catheron's granddaughter, Nellie," he said quietly. "You deserve every cent of it. God bless you! I hope you'll conserve it and enjoy it and never know the pinch of poverty again."

"I teld you I wouldn't wait to marry you until you had become fat and middle-aged and accumulated a few thousand dollars, Elmer. I meant what I said. Oh, my dear, I knew it all the time!—knew how little you were going to have left after everything should have been paid—and when I discovered, through McPeake, that you would escape with two hundred and eighteen thousand dollars I had a great euriosity to see how you would stand losing that. So I told McPeake I wanted you to think—ch. please forgive me, darling, but old Bunker was bluffing you all the time! So Mr. McPeake fixed it with the bank to tell you that story and then he pretended to have a long conversation with the collecter of internal revenue—and here's your two hundred and eighteen thousand dollars and some odd, Elmer—and on, you're so brave and simple and unspetted. and neres your two hundred and eighteen thousand dollars and some odd. I've-bought out old Anse Moody's controlling interest in the bank, and you're president and nobody is going to laugh at you. Oh, darling, I wouldn't let anybody do that!"
"Dear!" he plended. "Yes don't know anything about it. That Doris Gatewood will make a laughing stock of me yet. She can't prove a thing, but she'll give me a lot of publicity."
